The Flavors of Mexico

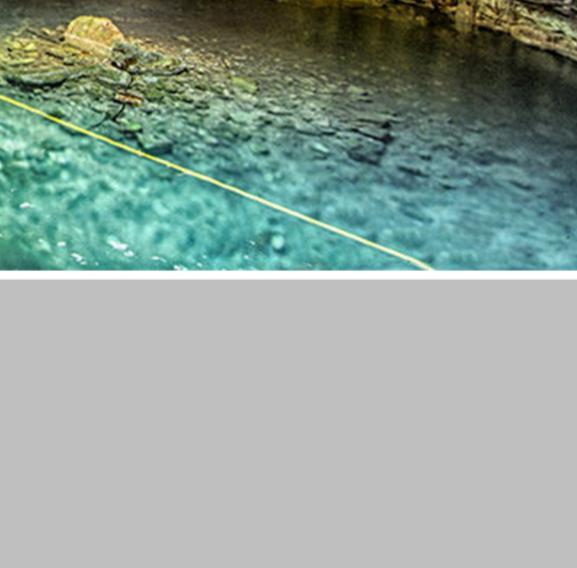

Chile en nogada

Chiles en nogada is a Mexican dish of poblano chiles stuffed with picadillo (a mixture usually containing ground meat, onions, fruits and cheese) topped with a walnut-based cream sauce called nogada, pomegranate seeds and parsley, and it is typically served at room temperature.

Mole de Caderas

Mole de caderas only comes around once a year, from November to December, after shepherds in the Mixteca region of Puebla, Oaxaca and Guerrero drive their flocks from the coast inland to slaughter.

Mole de Caderas

Cemita is the name for the type of bread served with this typical dish from Cuernavaca. With a generous pile of queso cheese, ham, a thick breaded pork fillet and mashed avocado you get a Poblano cemita, drinking an agua fresca made next to the Cemita stall.

Edrei Altamirano Segreste

Cenote Dzitnup, Yucatán's natural beauty.

Cenote Dzitnup, also known as X-keken, is located very close to the city of Valladolid, in the Yucatan, and is a Mexican beauty worth exploring.

This place consists of a medium grotto, which leads to a narrow tunnel that connects with a beautiful cenote with crystal clear water. There you can swim, snorkel and enjoy the perfect temperature of the water!
